

ANGE COSTELLO

2021 AICCM/ADFAS Canberra
'Student Conservator of the Year'
University of Canberra

Ange is a student member of AICCM and new to the field of conservation, but has actively contributed to the AICCM and its activities. She is highly committed to becoming part of the profession and to assist her progress has made numerous contacts both in her home state of Queensland and in the ACT where she is studying.

Ange is a student of rare ability. Her written work is flawless and shows a highly developed understanding of conservation and its ethics, methods, and literature.

Her practical work is likewise impeccable. Her lecturers and tutors agree that she is amongst the best students ever to pass through the UC course. She is clearly destined to make a mark in the conservation profession.

Given the current Covid lockdown, Ange has had little opportunity to become involved in AICCM activities in the ACT; there simply have not been any. However, she has attended our rare social get-togethers which have allowed her the opportunity to meet working conservators and make contacts. She has also recently attended several online Agents of Deterioration workshops run by the AICCM. together which have allowed her the opportunity to meet working conservators and make contacts, including the AICCM State President Rachel Spano. She has also recently attended several the online Agents of Deterioration workshops run by the AICCM.